Judge Is Told C.I.A. Sought Wilson's Aid To Get Soviet Missile

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29 (AP) — A former Federal official told a judge today that an officer of the Central Intelligence Agency had met with Edwin P. Wilson, a former agent, to discuss obtaining a Soviet anti-aircraft missile and jet from Libya.

Paul Cyr made the statement before being sentenced by a Federal judge on two counts of accepting an illegal gratuity from Mr. Wilson. Mr. Cyr's statement was the first assertion in court that an officer on active duty in the intelligence agency dealt with Mr. Wilson in the late 1970's after he had left the agency and began working with the radical Arab government of Libya.

A spokesman for the agency, Dale Peterson, said today that "an exhaustive search of our files has not uncovered any evidence that the C.I.A. asked Wilson to obtain Soviet equipment from Libya."

Assistant United States Attorney Carol Bruce told Federal District Judge John H. Pratt that the Government believed Mr. Cyr, a former official of the Federal Energy Administration, had cooperated with Federal investigators to the best of his ability, although his acknowledged alcoholism had left his memory hazy on some transactions.

Explosives for Terrorists

Mr. Wilson faces trial here on charges of supplying explosives for a Libyan terrorist training school and conspiring to assassinate a Libyan dissident. His attorneys have said that his defense would be that he was working for the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mr. Cyr could have been sentenced to four years in prison and fined $20,000, but Judge Pratt sentenced him to three years' probation, a $5,000 fine and community service to combat alcoholism.

The intelligence agency has repeatedly denied any official involvement with Mr. Wilson while he was dealing with Libya. •
